I could not be more excited to be leading The Franklin Institute at a time when new discoveries in science and technology are changing our lives so quickly. From exhibits to neighborhood events to research online—wherever you are, the Institute provides the resources you need in fun, engaging, and inspiring ways. I am immensely proud to build on the Institute’s 190-year legacy as we engage students, families, and adults across the region and around the world.

As I begin my tenure, the future at The Franklin Institute is bright. On June 14 we opened the Nicholas and Athena Karabots Pavilion, the first major addition to the Institute in more than 20 years. I hope you will visit us soon to enjoy its wonderful exhibits and expanded learning space for students. We are on a solid financial footing, and because of the generosity of our community, we are able to provide educational services for many at little or no cost.

It is a privilege to work with our outstanding Board of Trustees, exemplary staff, and dedicated volunteers to continue to advance the Institute’s mission to inspire a passion for learning about science and technology. Advances in these fields have the power to help us solve society’s most pressing problems, and to help us understand the beauty and wonder of the world around us. In the months and years ahead, I hope you will join me at The Franklin Institute so that we can continue making these discoveries together.
